The authors use the descriptions of the canoes on 11 different Pacific archipelagos in Canoes of Oceania to measure the relative amount of change in canoe technologies via a table of presence-absence data for 134 distinct canoe traits, classified as either "symbolic" or "functional". They demonstrate that functional components of canoes are significantly more similar across archipelagos than decorative canoe traits, as measured by Jaccard distance matrices.

The Soft, Warm, Wet Technology of Native Oceania 2 Today Western ideas about turbulent systems like oceans are being transformed by chaos theory, as it discovers order which science had always mistaken for randomness. The surface of the ocean turns out to be highly modulated, and actually contains a remembrance of all its earlier structures.
