During the Second World War, S. L. A. Marshall, a United States Army officer and official historian, claimed that only one in four US riflemen fired his weapon. There have been numerous criticisms of his work but the empirical evidence suggests that Marshall was broadly correct. The citizen soldier generally performed poorly in combat not only in the Second World War but in all the major wars ...

History of citizenship describes the changing relation between an individual and the state, commonly known as citizenship. Citizenship is generally identified not as an aspect of Eastern civilization but of Western civilization. There is a general view that citizenship in ancient times was a simpler relation than modern forms of citizenship, although this view has been challenged.
